

We invite applications for the Spring School on

Participation in Media Cultures

Studying Participation within Immigration Societies

April 5th to 8th, 2016

Institute of Media Studies, University of Tuebingen

The Spring School is dedicated to bringing together postgraduate students and academic scholars from various fields and disciplines to discuss their understandings and conceptualizations of participation in media cultures. A focus is being put on theoretical as well as empirical perspectives on studying (mediated) participation in the context of so-called immigration societies. With this, we want to offer a week of dialogue over recent debates on immigration and society in Europe in regards to what participation means and what role media can play.

We now invite applications of (young) researchers from different disciplines whose presence will become a vital part of the Spring School program. The program offers different formats of presentation of ideas and possibilities for dialogue. Participants will be expected to present their own research project during a poster session (posters to be prepared beforehand!) and take part in roundtable discussions on topics linked to the keynote speeches and further topics including media, participation, and civic culture or (feminist) activism or solidarity. The participants will be part of the roundtable discussion that is best suited to their research interests.

Keynote Speakers

Prof. Dr. Peter Dahlgren, Lund University

Dr. Karina Horsti, University of Jyväskylä

Prof. Dr. Katarzyna Marciniak, Ohio University
